

Before

After

COURTESY PHOTOS

Humid hair head? Try straightening your locks for the rough Dallas summer

By Molly Nolan
Fashion Coordinator

If you're like me on the quest for straighter hair, with hair that is partially wavy, slightly frizzy or uncontrollably curly and takes you countless hours to get it straight manageable, then you need thermal reconditioning!

The process that was invented in Japan and has swept all of Hollywood by storm, has now come to Dallas. Deanna Dipizio, owner of Salon Pompeo, went to New York to learn the technique after seeing a friend at a pool party get out of the water with completely straight hair.

Thermal reconditioning restructures the hair's cuticle, causing it to lie flat.

The process does come with a hefty price, but isn't worth it to know that you will have the straightest, sleekest hair right out of the shower, pool or beach, with little work or blow drying?

It lasts four to six months and only new growth needs to be thermally reconditioned after the initial process. Salon Pompeo, located in Uptown, is the first and only salon in Dallas/Ft. Worth offering the permanent hair straightening.

For more information or to book a free consultation with Deanna Dipizio or any of the other stylists at Salon Pompeo, call 214-979-0440.